

Workforce and Affordable Housing

Thriving communities house all residents, regardless of income. ULI leads national efforts to create and sustain workforce and affordable housing. Panels draw on developers, public officials, policy leaders, investors, and designers experienced in building high-quality housing for all residents of a community. Past panels explored the creation of a new town to provide workforce housing in Idaho's growing Sun Valley resort area and the redevelopment of Los Angeles' Jordan Downs public housing development into a mixed income community.

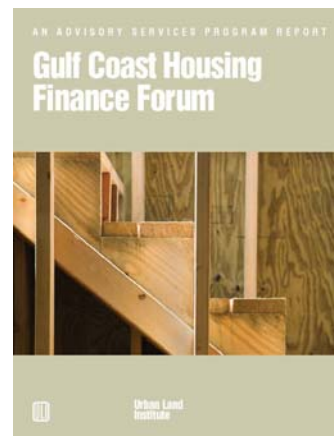

All ULI panel teams include professionals with diverse points of view—engineers, developers, planners, designers, investors, market analysts, and public officials—who work together to generate grounded, innovative solutions.

Sponsors for these panels include:

Workforce Housing Organizations
Housing Authorities
Developers
Local and State Government

Recent panels on this topic include:

Eagle County, Colorado
Mississippi Gulf Coast
Maui County, Hawaii
Martis Valley, California
Eagle-Vail, Colorado
Jordan Downs, Los Angeles, California

The Mississippi Gulf Coast Renaissance Corporation, an employer-supported workforce housing organization, invited the panel to recommend tools to finance the development of workforce housing and to enable employees to acquire the housing.
