

Economic Development

Need help with economic development strategies?

For 60 years, advisory services panels have helped communities hone their competitive advantage by integrating land use and economic development. Panels explore a community's strengths and offer candid, third-party perspective on ways to improve economic development strategies. Recommendations also tie economic development goals to land use.

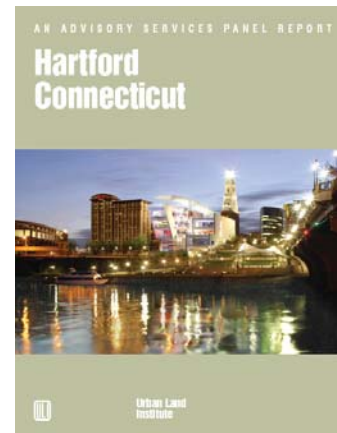

All ULI panel teams include professionals with diverse points of view—engineers, developers, planners, designers, investors, market analysts, and public officials—who work together to generate grounded, innovative solutions.

Sponsors for these panels include:

Local and State Governments
Business Organizations and Chambers of Commerce
Main Streets and Business Improvement Districts
Community Development Corporations

Recent panels on this topic include:

Springfield, Virginia
Saarbrücken, Germany
Utrecht, The Netherlands
Hartford, Connecticut
Shreveport/Bossier City, Louisiana
Germantown, Maryland

At the invitation of the City of Hartford and the MetroHartford Alliance, a regional business organization, a panel recommended market-based strategy to develop the Asylum Hill area into an economic engine for downtown Hartford, Connecticut.
