

Neighborhood Revitalization

Struggling to improve quality of life in your existing neighborhoods?

Successful neighborhood revitalization balances the needs of existing residents with the potential of the market and developers to create and support new housing, retail, and civic uses. Revitalization strategies must engage diverse economic and cultural groups. From public housing redevelopment to infill opportunities, ULI panels help communities develop strategic revitalization models that keep neighborhoods intact while encouraging new investment.

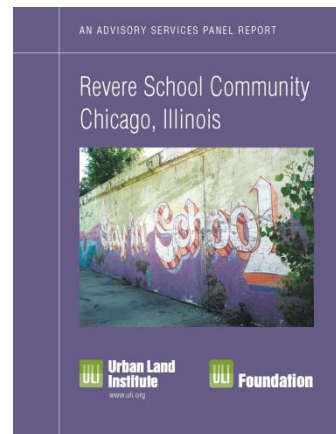

All ULI panel teams include professionals with diverse points of view—engineers, developers, planners, designers, investors, market analysts, and public officials—who work together to generate grounded, innovative solutions.

Sponsors for these panels include:

- Community Development Corporations
- Local Governments
- Housing Authorities
- Developers

Recent panels on this topic include:

Chicago, Illinois
Oak Creek, Wisconsin
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma
Cedar Rapids, Iowa
Charlotte, North Carolina
Pascagoula, Mississippi
San Antonio, Texas
Tustin, California
Richmond, Virginia
Las Vegas, Nevada

The City Chicago challenged a ULI panel to develop a revitalization plan for a portion of the Greater Grand Crossing Community.
